Employee Assistance Program (EAP) and Work-Life Service
New York University

What is an Employee Assistance Program (EAP)?

EAP is a service provided to you, your spouse or partner, and your dependents when you are having difficulty resolving life concerns on your own. The EAP can provide immediate consultation to assist you in reducing the distress associated with the challenge that you are encountering. Callers often feel more empowered to move forward with managing their concern after one consultation. In other situations, you may want to take advantage of up to five in-person or telephonic appointments with a professional clinician to address concerns such as: daily stress, relationship conflicts, alcohol and drug abuse, eating disorders, unhealthy lifestyles, parenting problems, depression or anxiety, grief and loss, and domestic abuse.

What if I only need some information or resources and not clinical consultation?

Carebridge Work-Life Specialists will assist you telephonically to help with life management concerns such as financial issues, child care, eldercare, legal documents, wellness resources, and college planning. You can work with the same expert on an unlimited telephonic basis for as long as the issue is of concern to you.

How can I research my EAP or Work Life concern on my own?

MyLifeResource.com is a comprehensive, interactive website providing expert articles and resources on the topics that matter most to you. Helpful tools include: streamed videos, self-assessments, interactive wellness tutorials, online trainings, databases to assist with child care, eldercare, relocation, education, an employee discount center, legal documents, financial calculators, polls and tips. You will need to enter the following access code during your initial web visit: FTN59. At any time, you can also call Carebridge to consult directly with an EAP Clinician or Work-Life Specialist to further your search.
