ISLAM, AFRICA, AND THE WEST: A ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION

Moderated by Prof. Michael Gomez, New York University and featuring: Ouseina Alidou, Africana Studies and Comparative Literature, Rutgers University; Sulayman S. Nyang, African Studies, Howard University; Philip Carter, US State Department; Asma Abdel Halim. Women's Studies, University of Toledo

Islam in Africa has a long and storied history, or set of histories, in sub-Saharan Africa as well as North Africa and Egypt. At a time of growing complexity and tension in the relations between the West and parts of the Muslim world, what are the perspectives of African Muslims on such relations, where does an Islamic Africa fit into the global equation, and how do the cultures, values, and struggles of African Muslims inform the developing conflict?

A NATION AMONG NATIONS

Guest lecture by Thomas
Bender, Ph.D., Professor of History, FAS, NYU

Thomas Bender is University Professor of the Humanities and Director of the International Center for Advanced Studies. His
major research interests
are cultural history,
intellectuals, comparative study of cities, history of academic disciplines, 19th-century culture, and historiography. Professor Bender is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, a winner of a Guggenheim Fellowship and the prestigious Frederick Jackson Turner Prize. In his latest work, A Nation Among Nations, Bender proposes a fresh and illuminating alternative to the conventional national narrative
of American exceptional-
ism. Placing American History firmly in a global context, he recasts the historical developments
that were central to the making of the nation and shows why they can be fully understood only in light of America's global entanglements over five centuries.

EXPANDING CREDIT
ACCESS: USING
RANDOMIZED SUPPLY DECISIONS TO ESTIMATE THE
IMPACTS

Guest lecture by Dean
Karlan, Yale University

A South African lender
relaxed its risk assessment
criteria by randomly approving some marginal applications that normally would have been rejected. Professors Karlan and Zinman then estimated the resulting impacts using survey data
on borrower behavior
and well-being, and administrative data on loan repayment. The results must be interpreted with caution but suggest that consumer
credit expansions can be welfare-improving.

AFRICAN

Featuring Klaus

African agricultural productivity has not seen the dramatic increase in growth that developing countries such as India and China have experienced. If the secrets of an African Green Revolution were someday unlocked, it could bring an unprecedented wealth to the continent. Specialists in agronomy, trade, agricultural markets, market institutions and other issues speak and compare notes on how productivity could be changed.

CONSERVATION
LEGACIES OF
L'ALLUVIONE

On November 4, 1966, after a month of heavy rain, the Arno River overflowed its banks, flooding the city of Florence and causing incalculable damage to life, property, and the cultural patrimony of Italy and the world. Now known as "l'Alluvione", the Florence Flood revolutionized the field of art restoration as no other single event. The Conservation Center of the Institute of Fine Arts, New York University and the Villa la Pietra, New York University in a joint American-Italian venture with Mayor Leonardo Domenici of Florence and the Opificio delle Pietre Dure e Laboratorio di Restauro Opere d'Arte will mark the 40th anniversary of the flood with an international symposium at the Villa la Pietra and the Palazzo Vecchio.

PROPERTY NORMS AND
STATE EMERGENCE: A
TEST OF PROPERTY
RIGHTS FORMATION

A guest lecture by Paul Dower, NYU PhD candidate

This paper presents a model of informal property norms that argues the dependence of economic value on localized knowledge influences the form of property institutions; in particular, property rules become more individual as the importance of localized knowledge increases. The model is then employed to empirically assess how formal property rights emerge.

GETTING TO THE
CORRUPTION: AN AFRICAN CASE STUDY
IN COMMUNITY
DRIVEN
DEVELOPMENT

Community driven development (CDD) has become an increasingly common model of project delivery the world over. Put simply, CDD represents an empowerment of communities at the bottom of the development food chain.

Communities are responsible for choosing projects, selecting leaders, and implementing and fiscally managing their projects in a decentralized manner. Not only has the strategy been widely employed by the World Bank, but it has also been adopted by bilateral donors, NGOs, and developing countries themselves. Yet despite the enormous proliferation of this model of project delivery, little data exist to evaluate its effectiveness.

This study reports on a case study from a rural African community where we have access to unusual detail regarding the individual-level demographics of participants in one CDD project. We are able to “follow the money” throughout the community and learn what socio-demographic variables are correlated with leadership in the project and level of economic benefit from the project. A social network analysis collected just prior to the project gives us other insights into some of the dynamics afoot. The data from this project point to losses on a scale sufficient to render virtually any project dysfunctional. Furthermore, the losses documented here—on the order of seventy percent—are not atypical of other CDD projects in the area. This study attempts to provide insights to answer the question, “What when wrong?”

THE IMPACT OF CHINA'S DEVELOPMENT ON WORLD RELATIONS

Sidney Gluck is a businessman and a retired member of the Social Science Faculty of the New School for Social Research. He is also the co-founder of the U.S. China Friendship Association and chairman of the U.S. - China Society of Friends. Prof. Gluck has lectured extensively on the restructuring of the Chinese economy and society.

This program will explore the dynamics of recent transformations in Chinese economic life — the accomplishments, conflicts, and contradictions that have been created as China has made the transition from a socialist to a mixed econ-

US SUPREME COURT JUSTICE JUSTICE ANTHONY KENNEDY

Associate Justice Anthony Kennedy has served on the US Supreme Court since 1988, when he was appointed by Reagan. He spends his summers in Salzburg, Austria, where he teaches international and American law at the University of Salzburg for the McGeorge School of Law international program and often attends the large yearly international judges conference held there. Defending his use of international law, Kennedy told the Sept. 12, 2005 issue of the New Yorker, "Why should world opinion care that the American Administration wants to bring freedom to oppressed peoples? Is that not because there's some underlying common mutual interest, some underlying common shared idea, some underlying common shared aspiration, underlying unified concept of what human dignity means? I think that's what we're trying to tell the rest of the world, anyway."
