

G 53.1300 American Political Institutions and Processes

NYU Dept. of Politics, Fall 2006

Professor: Raymond A. Smith
Thursdays 6:20-8:20
Office Hour: Before and after class by appointment
E-mail address: ras33@columbia.edu

This course offers a broad survey of American political institutions and processes, focusing on the most important and influential works in the study of the politics and government of the United States since World War II. The course is organized into three parts:

- Part I focuses on a brief overview of American political science since the 1950s, including the pluralist school, normative and empirical critiques of the pluralist school, and the development of rational choice perspectives. This part of the course emphasizes the reading and discussion of chapters and journal articles that have been particularly influential in the evolution of post-WWII American political science.
- Part II focuses on political behavior, including public opinion, interest group participation, and the electoral process. This part of the course emphasizes key debates about the role of these processes in American democracy and about the possibilities and limitations of participation in the US political system.
- Part III examines the branches of the federal government, including Congress, the Presidency, the federal bureaucracy and the judiciary. This part of the course reviews the literature about how each branch is shaped by institutional structures and processes on the one hand and by individual ambition and agency on the other.

Course Requirements

The principal requirements for this course are three take-home exams of one essay each. There will also be brief weekly written assignments and students will take turns presenting their analyses of course readings and helping to lead class discussion. The final grade will be calculated on the following basis: take-home exams – 75% (25% each); class assignments and participation – 25%. More information will be presented about the course requirements in class.

Course Readings

Since this course is a survey of the core works in American politics, there is a wide variety of readings, mostly book chapters or excerpts and journal articles. All readings should be completed before the class in which they are due and preferably in the order they are listed. Given this course's focus on the key works in the field, more recent scholarship will not be stressed. You are also encouraged to spend some time browsing recent issues of political science journals to acquaint yourself with current thinking in the field, and to use these in your research paper. A list of reputationally strong political science journals is attached to this syllabus.

All of the books and articles on this syllabus have been placed on reserve at Bobst Library. (The call numbers of all books are also listed below.) A limited number of key books from the first few weeks have been ordered at the NYU Bookstore. For those wishing to build a personal library of key classics in American politics, this list would be a good place to start. Core classics in the field below that are recommended for purchase have been marked by an asterisk. Books may be purchased or special ordered through the NYU Bookstore or other bookstores or ordered online. The Strand Bookstore (828 Broadway, several blocks north of the Politics Department) has a particularly deep backlist of books in the social sciences.

For those who may wish to brush up on particular factual details of American politics, the textbook American Government: Power and Purpose (Theodore Lowi, Benjamin Ginsburg and Kenneth Shepsle; CQ Press; Call#JK274.K43), which is used in my undergraduate class, is on reserve under my name at Bobst Library.

Course Schedule

This is the anticipated course schedule, but it may be subject to minor revisions as the semester progresses. A limited number of additional readings may also be assigned.
