SYNOPSIS

(Not for Publication)

Bulldog Drummond, on the eve of his marriage to Phyllis Clavering, is called out on a mysterious, fruitless errand, and returns to find that Phyllis has been kidnapped. But the kidnapper has made the whole thing a game! Clues are plentiful. All Drummond has to do is follow the clues—a sort of gruesome treasure hunt—and Phyllis will be saved; if he fails, then he'll never hear of the girl again! Irena Soldanis, an old foe, Mikhail Valdin and aides, have kidnapped the girl. Drummond, the impeccable Tenny, and the nervous Algy start off in pursuit. They solve and follow clue after clue, eventually finding Phyllis. But they are trapped. And only the genius of Neilson, who has been secretly following and aiding Drummond all the time, saves them from an untimely end. Drummond and Miss Clavering plan to wed at once. Tenny, who is much against the marriage, produces the license but a capricious wind snatches it and everybody sets out in pursuit.

New Drummond Film Absorbing Mystery

(Prepared Review)

A fine character returns to the screen with the new picture, "Bulldog Drummond Comes Back," which opened last night at the...... Theatre. The picture brings a new Drummond to the public in the person of John Howard, who plays the role with eminently satisfying dash and humor. This latest picture lives fully up to the high tradition set by previous Drummond pictures, being as thrilling and breathless a mystery as the public is likely to see this season.

Endowed with a dizzying pace by the direction of Louis King, the film rushes across the screen with the tale of the kidnapping of Drummond's fiancée, played by Louise Campbell, and the resultant chase of the kidnappers across England, with Drummond and his friends in hot pursuit. There's fighting and action galore in every reel of the story, and a hectic climax which threatens to wipe out Drummond and his associates in a lethal gas chamber.

John Barrymore takes the part of Colonel Neilson, a Scotland Yard official, in a role that allows him several queer makeup as well as opportunities to show off the Barrymore talents to the best possible advantage. Barrymore lends a large portion of the old Barrymore fire to an already spicy picture, and gives real competition for honors to John Howard. The two of them make the male leads of the picture really memorable portrayal.

* * *

John Howard abandoned a prospective career of English teaching in college to turn to the screen, and has since become fond of his new vocation. His latest film is "Bulldog Drummond Comes Back," opening...... at the...... Theatre, in which he plays the title role. His steady climb to popularity establishes him in the front rank of the younger stars.
