And a Picture That Is Different!

If you have never seen Rin-Tin-Tin in pictures the treat of your life is now in store for you—if you have seen his previous pictures you will particularly enjoy this one when you know that nothing Rin-Tin-Tin has ever made begins to compare with "The Night Cry". In it you'll see Rin-Tin-Tin do all that a human could do except talk and a lot of things that humans could never do. You'll see a powerful, super-intelligent animal, gentle and loyal in his love for his master but courageous, fierce and invincible in defense of his master or his flock.

Rin-Tin-Tin's relentless pursuit of a giant condor, a ferocious bird of prey with a wing spread of more than twelve feet, and his battle to the death with this immense bird is an outstanding achievement of motion picture production. The picture is full of thrills that will chase up and down your spine as the unusual film unfolds.

In "The Night Cry" you will realize once and for all time that a dog can have a sense of the dramatic, that he can become thoroughly imbued with the spirit of a production, that he can rise to the heights of tense drama, that he can portray love, pathos, anger, every emotion as well as outstanding human stars of stage and screen.

Here is a picture that is rich in every element of entertainment. It will be one of the outstanding pictures of the year—one that will be talked about on every hand, a picture for young and old. Tell your friends about it—they will want to see it, too.
