The Scotsman Gives Lily Her Name
By: NICOLETTE BETHEL
Start Page: 71
URL: http://library.nyu.edu/calabash/vol2iss2/0202071.pdf

Calabash: A Journal of Caribbean Arts and Letters is an international literary journal dedicated to publishing works encompassing, but not limited to, the Anglophone, Francophone, Hispanophone and Dutch-speaking Caribbean. The Journal is especially dedicated to presenting the arts and letters of those communities that have long been under-represented within the creative discourse of the region, among them: Aruba and the Netherlands Antilles, Maroon societies, and the Asian and Amerindian societies of the region. Calabash has a strong visual arts component.

Calabash is published by New York University. Please contact the publisher for further permissions regarding the use of this work. Publisher information may be obtained at: http://library.nyu.edu/calabash/about.html

Calabash: A Journal of Caribbean Arts and Letters
© 2003 New York University
THE SCOTSMAN GIVES LILY HER NAME (1904)

He lay without regret beside a girl whose child was calmed to sleep
by breasts of well-rubbed teak, and wet with milk.
When Annie filled her daughter’s mouth
on liquid nights, he suckled too,
and chased the shades of boats across the sea.
His child surprised him, springing wild and undesired in her. Alive despite his fear, she swam insistent for the light.

Malcolm smiled; she looked like him,
skin pale as teeth, hair still as water
hauled cool from limestone wells.
Her lips were pink against the breast
his lips had pulled; her hands
curled bright against the dark.
He dreamed of sails trimmed tight,
and fed his face to slapping air.

He named her Lily, for her whiteness,
but her eyes held secrets, dark as lakes
that swallowed sons beneath their waves.
He gathered winds about him. He wrapped her fingers round a ring, and left.
Annie held her girls and wept.