
A conversation with Niobe Way and Michael Reichert

RAISING BOYS FOR THE NEW MILLENNIUM

Psychologists Way (NYU Steinhardt, Applied Psychology) and Reichert (Center for the Study of Boys and Girls Lives, affiliated with University of Pennsylvania) present findings from their own original research and applied work on boys and offer a new perspective on boys' development and suggestions for what boys need to thrive throughout their lives.

- Learn how the research on boys' lives is shattering myths and stereotypes about what boys want and what they say they need.
- Explore the skills, perspectives and attitudes required for successful lives that challenge the conventions of previous generations.
- Hear how these changes demand that families, schools, and youth organizations rethink boys' development and what it means to be a boy.
- Challenge your thinking about raising boys today and in the future.

Copies of Niobe Way's recent book, Deep Secrets: Boys' Friendships and the Crisis of Connection, will be available for purchase and signing.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2011 ■ 12:30- 2:00 p.m.
Kimmel Center, Room 802

Open to Faculty and Graduate Students.

Lunch will be provided. Space is limited.

RSVP by November 7 to family.care@nyu.edu

Sponsored by: Commission on Gender, Race, and Social Justice at NYU Steinhardt, Faculty Senators Council, NYU Family Care, NYU Steinhardt Metropolitan Center for Urban Education, and Office of Faculty Resources.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY