Learn new languages and improve your ability to understand ideas and practices across different cultures. At nearly all of NYU's global locations, you can enhance your language skills while applying this knowledge in its cultural context. Through coursework, internships, clubs, and homestays, you can practice speaking in academic, professional, and social settings. If you are an NYU student majoring in a specific language at the College of Arts and Science, you can study abroad at several global locations that have language intensives and immersion programs that can result in your becoming proficient in one semester. Through course-related excursions and your own personal experiences, you will gain a deeper understanding of your host country's culture—a crucial part of putting language into context.
