Gain a thorough understanding of applied psychology across cultures and in various contexts with coursework offered by the Department of Applied Psychology at NYU’s Steinhardt School of Culture, Education, and Human Development. Through Steinhardt’s global pathway in applied psychology, you can complete courses within your major and gain new insights into new cultures while studying at NYU Buenos Aires in Argentina or NYU Sydney in Australia. In Buenos Aires you can get to know the cosmopolitan city while practicing your Spanish language skills. In Sydney you’ll have an unparalleled opportunity to take courses in your major—and explore exciting new areas of study—while you live and study in Australia’s largest city.
NYU BUENOS AIRESS

If you are an applied psychology sophomore, you are encouraged to spend your fall semester at NYU Buenos Aires, where you’ll explore questions of social justice and examine the role of public intellectuals, collective memory, media, and the arts in human psychology. You’ll be able to take the required Developmental Psychology course as well as a variety of core courses and electives and your language requirement. If you’re majoring in Global Public Health and Applied Psychology, you can complete your global public health internship with a local institution while in Buenos Aires. Your studies will be complemented by several cocurricular offerings made possible through NYU’s relationships with Argentine art museums, heritage sites, and civic and state institutions.
